

Children are the future of the world. Education just brings out the potential in every child, and turns them into brilliant citizens, who can contribute to the country.

First of all education should be something that everyone has access to. With proper knowledge anybody can become great, and make the world a better place. Take Marie Curie as an example. She resided in Poland, and at that time the the Russians were the rulers. Girls were not permitted to learn, even so Marie continued learning in secret. Soon she became a great role model, and the discoverer of not one, but two elements. She got two Nobel peace prizes with her husband Pierre Curie. One for Chemistry, and one for Physics. (I chose Marie Curie because she was permitted to learn, she did, and she became amazing.)

Next, education should not be so expensive that the needy can't afford it. The wealthy kids should not be the only people going to school. Just because parents do not earn a high income, and drive a fancy car, does not mean that the children have to be punished with no knowledge. A child is like a small plant, education fertilizes the plant, and makes it stronger including wonderful.

Finally, girls have an equal right to go to school just like boys. A girl is no less stronger, or smarter. In fact educated girls build strong families, and even stronger communities.

In conclusion, education should not be denied to children of any age, or gender. Knowledge should be easily accessible to anybody.

THE END!
